

Scheduling Services Aid Student Groups

By Burt Howell

Scheduling anyone? Betty Kane isn't likely to ask that question, but she answers it hand-dof a week.

In charge of BYU Student Scheduling Services, she schedules by 2,000 rooms to students every week.

Some rooms on campus are used by Church or organization parties, others are used for play practices or study sessions.

Some rooms are not for the only item of use. The scheduling office also arranges for equipment students might need to use, such as lights, microphones, tables, etc.

One of the office's biggest jobs is arranging facilities for the eight campus teams and 84 wards.

According to Betty Kane, the most important item in scheduling is to do it in advance. The sooner a student schedules, the better his chances are of getting the room he wants.

Students can be scheduled for an entire semester at a time, or for just one date. Each organization should have one appointed member who is in charge of scheduling for the group. That person can make all necessary arrangements and find out special information from the office.

Mrs. Kane, who has been in charge of scheduling at BYU for 12 years, says that there are still occasional problems in working with students.

One of these is the fact that many students do not make proper arrangements during their first visit, and then have to make several repeat calls to verify what they want.

Another major problem is that students find it necessary to make changes in plans after they have a room scheduled, but neglect to inform scheduling about the change. So, often a room will go unused.

Any approved amenity group may use Scheduling Services. Approval is obtained at the IOC offices on the fourth floor of the Wilkinson Center, or at the Scheduling office.

Bearded Or Bare?

Beards at BYU are taking on a new look. Since the administration's statement that beards are permissible, if neatly kept, more and more whiskers have appeared on campus.

Random comments of students show either pleasure or indifference to the new craze, but of all students interviewed, none actually condemned beards as a whole.

Lee-Ann Bingham, a freshman from Denver, Colo., was amazed at the appearance of so many beards.

"At first, I was critical," she says, "but if it doesn't change a man's look, outlook and accomplishment of good, the appearance should not be condemned."

Moustaches are fine, according to Anne Halverson, from Ogden, Utah, but she feels that if anything would give a desogative impression, it would be beards if they are widely connected with hippies.

"My only real objection is a long or bushy beard," says Bryan Tobler, a senior from Orem, Calif. "They definitely went out with our grandparents."

Ladene Pitcher, a junior from Oxygton, B.C., Canada, feels that some beards are required. "I think that if good taste is used, however, it shows individuality."

Freshman Denise Carter, Ogden, says that it is an individual matter and if a person wants to grow a beard, he should be able to.

Summing up the general consensus of students is Charles Zebell, a freshman from Provo, who says, "Even Bingham Young had a beard. So what's the big deal about that?"
